

This volume is the work of a skillful chef de cuisine. He gives his book the title, "a guide for the preparation of eggs in over five hundred different styles, with some reference to their importance in the past and present times." As this indicates, the subject is fully and thoroughly treated. Of the value of eggs as a food no question can arise. Within an egg are combined the elements of the most perfect foods. Of all products "save milk, perhaps" it is best adapted to support life; and without the aid of eggs, it is justly claimed, the artistic cook would have to abandon his profession in despair. Notwithstanding the great variety of styles in which eggs may be prepared, "there are really," our author states, "not more than a dozen distinctly different methods of cooking eggs; and these may be classified as follows: boiled, poached, mollet; shirred, or au miroir; scrambled, fried; in cocottes, or cases; moulded in timbales; hard, stuffed, cold, omelets, sweet; and a few miscellaneous styles, which cannot be very well classified." To give simple though explicit directions for the preparation of eggs in any of the styles mentioned above is made the chief province of this book. Among other ways of enriching his work the author quotes Friar O'Meara's song, a single verse of which we append: "Three different ways there are of eating them, First boiled, then fried with salt.-- But theres a particular way of treating them, Where many a cooks at fault; For with parsley and flour Tis in Margarets power To make up a dish, Neither meat, fowl, nor fish; But in Paris they callt A neat Omelette. Sweet girl! In truth, as in Latin, her name is a pearl, When she gets Me a platter of nice omelettes." The Boston Cooking School Magazine of Culinary Science, Volume 3 [1899]
