

Video production is rapidly replacing writing and typing as must-have skills for today's business communicators and community advocates. A well-told video story can move audiences to action, whether on YouTube, in the living room, or the ballroom. Following up on his Tribute Videos for Love and Money book, a look at creating video Tributes for work or pleasure, Brien Lee now takes a look at the hard cold facts about what makes a good video story. This concise book answers questions, like: How much should a video cost? How do I work with music? How should I prepare a room for video projection? How do I outline my story? How do I conduct interviews? Written for both producers and buyers of video productions, this inside look is culled from the author's 40 years experience in major video production for corporate America and the performing arts.
